This invention relates to a two-component hydraulic system for drivingly connecting a pair of axially displaceable members, such as a pair of axially spaced drive shafts, having sealing means therebetween, and more particularly to such a system including a hydraulic drive control valve and a driver mechanism having means for operating the control valve and means for receiving and transmitting torque between the drive shafts. In order to drively connect a pair of axially displaceable members, such as a pair of axially spaced drive shafts, having sealing means therebetween, it has heretofore been suggested to use a hydraulic drive connection system. In such a system, a driver for displacing one of the shafts will typically include a hydraulic motor and a piston slidably mounted in a cylinder in which the motor and the shaft are disposed and which has a valve bore therein for hydraulically communicating the motor with a hydraulic pressure source. A pump or other fluid supply source is usually provided which supplies pressurized fluid under pressure to the motor for operating the motor and thereby to displace the shaft. A valve element, disposed in the valve bore for regulating the flow of fluid from the motor to the hydraulic pressure source, will typically be provided to prevent unintentional displacement of the shaft and damage to the motor when the pressurized fluid being supplied to the motor is disconnected from the motor. It has also been suggested to use a single-acting piston-and-cylinder driver in place of a two-acting piston-and-cylinder driver in such a hydraulic drive connection system. Since a single-acting piston-and-cylinder driver will not provide two-way drive, the valve element associated with such a driver will desirably include a means for also providing a force on the
