This file was scanned and verified by Promtware.com.Q: Chrome Extension - Get current page I'm working on a Chrome extension which requires to find the current page of the user. I know that this is possible using content scripts, but I would like to create a simple "background" script. Is it possible? Is there a way to get the current page outside of content scripts? A: The easiest way is to use `chrome.tabs.query(...)`. For example: `chrome.tabs.query({'windowId': chrome.runtime.getBackgroundPage()}, function(tabs) { chrome.tabs.getSelected(null, function(tab) { chrome.tabs.sendMessage(tab.id, {greeting: "Hello"}, function(response) {}); }); });` A: Yes, this is possible. I recently made a chrome extension which get the current window and uses the credentials from it. I can post the code, if you're interested (but this is just the regular API call I make to the background). Of course the background can also send another extension a message on your behalf, so it's not dependent on content scripts, etc. `chrome.tabs.query({active: true, url: window.location.href}, function(tabs) { chrome.tabs.sendMessage(tabs[0].id, {greeting: "Hello"}, function(response) {}); });` A: if you really want a background script, try following : ask user if he want to allow script to use page context use chrome.runtime.connect() to open a windows with contentScript and ask page about its size (if it's smaller, close the window and ask again) if all ok, you have the current page. - [Narrator] Sometimes when I
